Head To Head Competition Is Always The First MSBL WS Tie Breaker
Website Standings Are Based On Runs Allowed And Not Head To Head Play
By Tom Prendergast

We received several calls to the World Series office last night with questions regarding the final standings and consequent playoff berths. While games were still being played last night several teams were under the wrong impression that they were finishing higher in the division and therefore were surprised when the playoff schedules were posted. Unfortunately the sort feature on the MSBL World Series website standings page, isn't programed for head to head match ups, just runs allowed. And that's why some teams were listed second in the standings when in actuality they were third or forth. The standings listed inside on page three are the ones that today's playoff pairings were based on. Also in divisions where one team plays an extra pool play game, their standings are based on winning percentage, not points. So a 3-3 record (500%) would be ranked ahead of a 2-3 record (400%). However in determining the wild card teams from multiple divisions, the runs allowed category is used as the tie breaker.

MSBL / MABL World Series Spotlight On:
Tom Krause (35+ Puget Sound Gators)

Fly ball caught by the left fielder.
The Puget Sound Gators storm the mound, celebrating the 35+ Central 2007 World Series championship. Their manager slowly walks toward the celebration, tears in his eyes. He is missing his father-in-law, a former college player and later scout for the Cubs and Blue Jays. He would have enjoyed this moment so much. Twice a survivor of cancer surgery himself, Tom Evans Krause had a profound (continued at the bottom of this page) appreciation for the moment. Since 1995, he had worked tirelessly with his local league to create a quality experience for so many men like himself. Still the longest serving board member of PSBL, this is his only ring earned in seven trips to the desert. That's only part of the story. A veteran radio DJ, program director, and consultant for 21 years, Tom also spent 18 years heading up the broadcasting department at Green River Community College near Seattle. Among his duties was managing students at KGRG AM & FM. Married for 24 years to Nicole, his children (Andrew and Allison) are both experiencing success in college and high school. Tom has been a part of six divisional championships in his local league, and has arranged all the details of 4 exhibition games for his league at the Mariners' Safeco Field. He was, of course, the public address announcer for one of the games. (continued on page 3)

WS Spotlight - Tom Krause

A former Minnesota product, Tom tried to model his play after Kirby Puckett and Harmon Killebrew, whom he resembles as a short, right handed first baseman wearing #3. Tom is proud of his 44 game regular season streak without an error and of his .330+ lifetime batting average over 17 seasons. But whether he's winning or not, he reminds himself to take in each moment. With enthusiasm, joy, and a knowing smile....it's an honor to someone who is probably watching, from the other side.
